- II. In the political arena, Khrushchev on 30 August stated that continued US-UK testing "relieves the Soviet Union of the obligation (to cease tests) it had assumed unilaterally" last March. Despite this, Soviet spokesmen have so far refrained from any unequivocal announcement of a test resumption.
- A. However, Khrushchev's statement and a recent flurry of propaganda may have been intended to justify in advance a resumption of testing.
1. In a letter to UN Secretary-General on 16 September proposing that the question of test cessation be included on the agenda of the present General Assembly session, Gromyko charged US and UK are trying to take advantage of the Soviet moratorium "to secure military advantages for themselves."
- III. A resumption of tests in the near future would tend to undermine the USSR's debating position in the UN.
- A. However, the Kremlin may believe the need to keep pace with recent US-UK nuclear progress outweighs the political disadvantages of renewed testing.
- IV. A further consideration may be a desire for a fresh demonstration of Soviet nuclear prowess to bolster the Soviet bargaining position in the Geneva talks on a test cessation scheduled for 31 October.

- A. Moscow probably views these talks as the climax of its long campaign to force the West to agree to a test ban independent of other aspects of disarmament.
- V. Finally Khrushchev may wish to remind the world of Soviet power during the Far Eastern crisis.
